By Professor Tony Attwood and Dr Michelle Garnett Many women on the autism spectrum deliberated about whether or not they should seek a formal diagnosis, weighing up the potential costs and benefits. Once making that sometimes difficult and painful decision, there is a long and time consuming road ahead before they find someone with the knowledge to make an accurate diagnosis.

Understanding Girls on the Spectrum - Attwood and Garnett ...

It has been generally accepted that the prevalence of Asperger Syndrome in girls is about 1:4 of that found in boys, but Dr Attwood believes this to be more like one girl to every two boys. The reason for the misconception is because girls with Asperger Syndrome present very differently to boys with the same condition and "fly under the radar of a diagnosis".
